What is the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act?

The ARRA was passed by Congress in direct response to the economic crisis. Its stated goals are to:

- Create new jobs and save existing ones
- Spur economic activity and invest in long-term growth
- Foster accountability and transparency in government spending

Funding under the Recovery Act is aimed at helping achieve a longstanding goal of the Federal Government: making high-speed Internet available to millions of Americans who do not have access to it. As economic activities around the world are increasingly conducted over the Internet, Federal officials and U.S. economic experts have continuously cited widespread availability of high-speed Internet as critical to sustaining American global competitiveness.
